

Nations, Andrew seems to have taken an important part, but unfortunately we have no certainty as to the extent or place of his labors. Eusebius (Church History III. I), relying apparently upon Origen, assigns Scythia as his mission field. Saint Gregory of Nazianzus mentions Epirus; Saint Jerome Achaia; and Theodoret Hellas. Probably these various accounts are correct, for Nicephorus, relying upon early writers, states that Andrew preached in Cappadocia, Galatia, Bithynia and in Byzantium where he appointed Saint Stachys as its first bishop. He also preached in Thrace, Macedonia, Thessaly, and Achaia.

It is generally agreed that he was crucified by order of the Roman Governor, Aegeas or Aegeates, at Patrae in Achaia, and that he was bound, not nailed, to the cross, in order to prolong his sufferings. The cross on which he suffered is commonly held to have been the decussate cross, now known as Saint Andrew's, though the evidence for this view seems to be no older than the fourteenth century. His martyrdom took place during the reign of Nero, on 30 November, A.D. 60; and both the Latin and Greek Churches keep 30 November as his feast.

Saint Andrew's relics were translated from Patrae to Constantinople, and deposited in the church of the Apostles there, about A.D. 357. When Constantinople was taken by the French, in the beginning of the thirteenth century, Cardinal Peter of Capua brought the relics to Italy and placed them in the cathedral of Amalfi, where most of them still remain. Saint Andrew is honored as their chief patron by Russia and Scotland. *(excerpted from: www.newadvent.org)

Saint Andrew, Apostle

*The name "Andrew" (Greek, Andrei, manhood, or valor), like other Greek names, appears to have been common among the Jews from the second or third century B.C.

Saint Andrew, the Apostle, son of Jonah, or John (Matthew 16: 17; John 1: 42), was born in Bethsaida of Galilee (John 1: 44). He was the brother of Simon (Peter) (Matthew 10: 2; John 1: 40). Both were fishermen (Matthew 4: 18; Mark 1: 16), and at the beginning of Our Lord's public life, occupied the same house at Capharnaum (Mark 1: 21, 29).

From the fourth Gospel we learn that Andrew was a disciple of the Baptist, whose testimony first led him and John the Evangelist to follow Jesus (John 1: 35-40). Andrew at once recognized Jesus as the Messiah, and hastened to introduce Him to his brother Peter (John 1: 41). Thenceforth, the two brothers were disciples of Christ. On a subsequent occasion, prior to the final call to the apostolate, they were called to a closer companionship, and then they left all things to follow Jesus (Luke 5: 11; Matthew 4: 19-20; Mark 1: 17-18).

Finally, Andrew was chosen to be one of the Twelve; and in the various lists of Apostles given in the New Testament (Matthew 10: 2-4; Mark 3: 16-19; Luke 6: 14-16; Acts 1: 13), he is always numbered among the first four. The only other explicit reference to him in the Synoptists occurs in Mark 13: 3, where we are told he joined with Peter, James and John in putting the question that led to Our Lord's great eschatological discourse. In addition to this scanty information, we learn from the fourth Gospel that on the occasion of miraculous feeding of the five thousand, it was Andrew who said: "There is a boy here who has five barley loaves and two fishes: but what are these among so many?" (John 6: 8-9); and when, a few days before Our Lord's death, certain Greeks asked Philip that they might see Jesus, Philip referred the matter to Andrew as to one of greater authority, and then both told Christ (John 12: 20-22). Like the majority of the Twelve, Andrew is not named in the Acts except in the list of the Apostles, where the order of the first four is Peter, John, James, Andrew; nor have the Epistles or the Apocalypse any mention of him.

From what we know of the Apostles generally, we can, of course, supplement somewhat these few details. As one of the Twelve, Andrew was admitted to the closest familiarity with Our Lord during His public life; he was present at the Last Supper; beheld the risen Lord; witnessed the Ascension; shared in the graces and gifts of the first Pentecost, and helped, amid threats and persecution, to establish the Faith in Palestine.

When the Apostles went forth to preach to the
